Norman E. Soules Has Wireless Telegraph Station—Night Blooming Cercus Excites Much Admiration—Local Personal Notes.

Norman E. Soules of No. 344 Central avenue has about completed his wireless telegraph station, and expects to be able to transmit messages as well as to receive them very soon. He has been experimenting with wireless telegraphy for about a year, doing work along these lines with Raymond Wade, Howard Potter and Paul Ricketts. He had a station complete last fall, but took it down during the winter and renewed it this past spring, when he fixed up a receiving set of all new instruments, some of which he bought and some of which he bought and some of which he hade himself. He has succeeded in picking up New London several times. His sending instrument is almost complete to the control of the village.
